Being with the World As It Is:
Hameed on Understanding Violence

It is so challenging to read about the outbreaks of violence around the world these days. The inhumanity and sadness of these events can make many of us feel overwhelmed. In an attempt to understand how the Diamond Approach can help us hold what seems so senseless, Hameed and Emerald Mountain student, Jorge Arango, sat down to talk about the June 12th shootings at Pulse, a gay club in Orlando, Florida that killed 49 people and wounded 53.

JA: This is something that affected me personally as a gay man who is also Latin. But we seem to move at a breathless pace from tragedy to tragedy these days, so I don’t want to diminish what has recently happened with the shooting of unarmed black men in Minnesota and Louisiana, the police deaths in Dallas, the recent killings in Baghdad and other acts of violence. And this is a very complex issue...

Meet the Teachers

Rob Merkx

How did you find the Diamond Approach?
I found the Diamond Approach through a good friend whose judgment I trusted. She went to one of the first retreats in Germany some 25 years ago. She experienced this retreat as very valuable and effective in providing tools for exploration. So I decided to check it out for myself. I was used to more dynamic and therapeutic ways of working with people and it took me a while to notice and appreciate the subtle realms of Being.

I never felt attracted to teachings where I was required to believe in a doctrine or blindly follow a teaching. In the Diamond Approach I liked the humanness and openness of the teachers.

Our journey through this earthly existence is usually rocky, jagged, parched. We live with the promise of some kind of happiness and fulfillment but more often than not, there is little guidance for how to find the holy ground of being. With the correct orientation, we can learn how to use such difficulty to go beyond it to a land of harmony and peace. LEARN MORE>>
